Trump Is No Friend of Workers ... at the Mailbox

Trump's big-money donor is running the U.S. Postal Service into the ground, because Trump is angry about widespread voting by mail – like the way all New Jersey voters will get their ballots in the mail the last week of September through the first week of October. What New Jerseyans are not getting in the mail are their checks and lifesaving medicine.

Under pressure from working families, Trump's postmaster suspended his so-called efficiency rules that delayed deliveries by banning overtime. But postal workers still worry that today's mail is getting left on the truck until tomorrow. That means New Jerseyans need to vote by mail early so their ballots don't get stuck on the truck.

It's not only the postmaster who has made the Postal Service a political issue. Most members of the Postal Service's board of governors were appointed by Trump and share his desire to privatize the mail.

Trump's gang in the Senate won't pass a coronavirus relief bill that includes a USPS bailout, because they're on vacation. Even though the House is back in session to save the mail.
